the rain had poured in torrents all day and now for the third time since morning i came home wet uncomfortable and weary i half dreaded to look at the slate lest some urgent call should stare me in the face it must indeed be a case of life and death that takes me out again to night said i as my good wife met me in the entry and with light hands made active by love assisted in the removal of my great coat and comforter now come into the sitting room she said your slippers are on the rug and your dressing gown warmed and waiting tea is ready and will be on the table by the time you feel a little comfortable what a dreadful day it has been dreadful for those who have been compelled to face the storm i remarked as i drew off my boots and proceeded to take advantage of all the pleasant arrangements my thoughtful wife had ready for my solace and delight it was on my lip to inquire if any one had called since i went out but the ringing of the tea bell sent my thought in a new direction when with my second self leaning on an arm and my little aggy holding tightly by my hand i moved on to the dining room all the disagreeable things of the day forgotten has any one been here i asked as i handed my cup for a third replenishing professional habit was too strong the query would intrude itself from the moment in 1770 when reverend eleazar wheelock located dartmouth college in hanover the college on the hill and the village at the college have been inseparably linked as one and from the time when the first log hut was constructed to the present the built and natural environments have evolved as part of an organic evolutionary process due to changing architectural tastes neglect and growth many of the historic buildings that once flourished are no longer standing bygone landmarks like the beautiful entry porte cochere at the mary hitchcock memorial hospital and the handful of handsome buildings that marked the start of the university of new hampshire are now lost to history join architect and historian jay barrett as he uncovers the stories behind the forgotten treasures of hanover
